Case study

A 34-year-old teacher presented with acute sinusitis following several weeks of upper respiratory symptoms. Despite a course of antibiotics and nasal decongestants, she continued to experience facial pain, congestion, and a persistent sense of fatigue. Tired of recurring symptoms, she chose to try integrative approaches alongside her ongoing medical care.

Energetic field assessment with bioresonance revealed an energy disturbance in the sinus region, with moderate energetic deficits noted. The personalized treatment plan focused on harmonizing cell energy using frequency-based therapy. Sessions aimed to restore her overall energy balance, supporting immune regulation and symptom relief.

After several bioresonance sessions, she reported improved nasal airflow, reduced pain, and greater daily vitality. Bioresonance was used to complement traditional medication, not replace it. This case illustrates how cause-oriented, frequency-based support can enhance well-being and help manage persistent symptoms in a responsible, integrated manner.
