Case study

A 42-year-old office worker experienced recurring cases of conjunctivitis over the past year. Despite using antibiotic eye drops prescribed by her ophthalmologist, she continued to have bouts of redness, discomfort, and watery eyes, especially during periods of stress or seasonal allergies. She sought additional support to address these persistent symptoms and improve her overall eye health.

During her assessment, energetic field testing through bioresonance identified a moderate energetic disturbance around her ocular region, along with mild imbalances in her immune response. The practitioner explained that disturbance in the cellular frequencies can lead to health consequences, emphasizing a cause-oriented, energy-based perspective. A personalized plan was developed, incorporating bioresonance sessions aimed at harmonizing the cell frequencies in the body and supporting her immune system.

Over several weeks, the client reported less irritation and fewer recurrences. While she maintained her conventional care, she noticed increased comfort and energy. Her bioresonance program focused on restoring overall energy balance and fostering healing at the cellular level. She continues regular energy assessments, complementing her traditional treatments with this supportive approach.
