Case study

A 26-year-old woman came seeking help for chronic, irregular, and painful menstruation that dated back to her teenage years. She described symptoms including significant cramps, fatigue, and mood swings, which engaged her in a cycle of over-the-counter pain medication use every month. Conventional gynecological evaluation was unremarkable, and hormonal treatments provided only limited relief.

During her initial visit, a bioresonance energy field assessment revealed energetic imbalances frequently seen in menstrual disorders. Using a frequency-based medical technique, her practitioner developed a personalized program focused on harmonizing cell energy and supporting optimal cellular frequencies. She underwent weekly bioresonance sessions while continuing her usual gynecological care. Over two months, her menstrual cycles became more regular, and the intensity of her symptoms gradually lessened. She reported improved overall well-being and reduced dependence on pain medication. The experience reinforced for her the value of cause-oriented, energy-balancing care to complement traditional approaches and support her journey toward wellness.
